THE QUARKER LADY.

Ob, this quaint and quiet Quaker!
Bended head would never make her
More direrect or modester.
But the gailants pass her by,
For with tender, steadfast eye
Straight she looks up at the sky!
Surely, now, some brighter, hues,
"Stead of lavenders and bines,
Would delight aome jolly fellow.
Russet bee, with bands of yellow,
Or a golden butterfly
At her fest would love and sigh!
But to talk's no use, I know;
Still in abour dress she'll go.
And her Jose of Heaven will show;
And my Quaker lady sweet,
Living in her dim refet.

THREE INTERVIEWS.

HH. One morning in August, 1863, Dr. George Iyzarde of the —th South Carolina Infantry, then on special staff detail in Richmond, Va., was passing down a line of new recruits drawn up for medical inspection. He put them through the usual contortions. They swung their arms, rose up on itheir toes, rolled their eyes and put out their tongues after the manner of their toes, rolled their eyes and put out their tongues after the manner of their kind, while he perfunctorily thumped and scrutialized them not unlike a critical darkey in a melou patch.

At last he halled before a medium sized, yellow haired lad, whose beardless face, sheader physique and cryasive, not to say hervous, manner indicated that youthful timbility was strongly contending with the flery resolution that had doubtless brought him lither. His preferraminally large, bright eyes hardly ever rose in their glances above the surgeon's sash and sword belt. His face and neck were well tanned, yet his features were of classic regularity and his hand small and shapely. The routine questions as to age, etc., were answered with evident refuctance. The doctor seemed to grow suspicious, for he suddenly pressed his knuckles sharply against the youth's chest. The latter sprang back with a swift appealing glance at his tormentor, who abrupily turned, passed to the next man and so on down the line. When he had finished, Doe tor Tyzard returned to the lad, and, consulting his list, said in a cold, official tone:

"Your name is Oliver Wild?"

"Yes, sit."

"You will come with me, Wild. Your case seems to require special attention."

The surgeon led the way, while Wild with a swift appeal attention."

The surgeon led the way, while Wild, with eyes upon the ground, quietly followed him into a private office, when the latter closed the door, and tureing to the would be soldler, he said, sternly:

"Now, miss or madam, how long have you been masquerading in this attire, and what is your real purpose?"

The youth looked up with a frightened contraction of feature; then assumed with effort a hardened, indifferent air, saying:

"I reely don't make out to understand ye, sir."

"I will make my meaning plain. You are a woman. It is difficult to conceal such things from a physician who knows his business. Do not deny it. "Twould save you from a more public exposure. Your molives, though widely mistaken, may be honorable; yet, though the Confederacy needs soldlers badly we can do without women in that capacity for a while yet. I also fear that in your language, as in your setlons, you are veiling your real station in life by an assumption of ignorance as unnatural to you as it seems degrading to me." of Ignorance as unnatural to you as it

As Tyzarde concluded, the other lowered his gaze to the floor and remained obstinately silent. The doctor

"Do you really think so?" she interrupted. (We may as well say "she" now.) In her entrestees she forgot her cracker dialect and intonation, and spoke with a pure and refined enunciation.

"Certainly," replied lyzarde. "There are bespirals needing good nurses; also the Sisters of Mercy and Charity of various religious and secular orders who follow the ambuiance and brave shot and shell to accomplish good work on the battle field. The courage of the goldier is not more essential than the devotion of those who minister to human suffering amid frightful perils to the living. Even your face and hands are artificially tanned. See?"

Before she could resist he took one of her hands, pushed up the coatsleeve, revealing thereby a shapely white arm. Through the brown upon her cheek he saw the rich color rising as she hung her head. At this period some one entered the outer office, and the doctor, bidding her to remain there until his return, went out, closing the door behind him.

It was several minutes before he came back, only to find that the would.

He afterward made various discrete inquiries, yet heard of her no more, finally abandoning the quest with a feeling of plque. She had interested him more than he felt the heroine of such a freakish excapade deserved. There was a contradiction and mystery involved therein that puzzled and fascinated him; yet as the months were on these impressions gradually faded into a vague, gently regretful memory.

THEN.

THEY. THEY.

On a mellow May morning of the year 1867, a gentleman was walking along one of those puzzileg, alphabetical side streets of Washington, which in the carly post bellum days were usually either bathed in mud or choked with dust. A lodging and boarding-house atmosphere pervaded the dingy brick houses on either side. A tawdry weari-ness of aspect brooded over them, as though the requirements of existence ness of aspect brooden over them, as though the requirements of existence were burdensome.

Andrew Johnson's efforts to conciliate the old aristocratic element of the South were at their climax, and the National Capital was much frequented by the social and political leaders of Dixle in consequence. Many of them were safely impoverished and aired, per force, their decayed yet unruffled gentility about the boarding houses rather than the great hotels.

The gentleman finally pulled a certain door bell and was ushered into a much used parlier by a white aproned mulatto, who took his card and hastened up stairs. The visitor sank back into a chair and looked out at the window, He was tall, slender and well dressed, with a pensive air, a long brown mous tache and close clipped hair, slightly tinged with gray. Five minutes passed, and his attitude remained unchanged. Then there was a soft rustle of drapery down the hall, a faint scent of violets in the air, and a low, clear voice entering his ear as its owner gilded into his presence. He had arlsen, hat in hand, as these words were uttered:

"Dr. lyzarde will pardon this intru-presence. He had arisen, hat in hand, as these words were uttered:

"Dr. Iyzarde will pardon this intrusion I hope, for instead of Mr. Seabrook, it is only his niece. Uncle Horare is out — Good Heavens?"

"My little recruit namin!"

These exclamations were the result of a mutual survey of each other. The lady flushed violently, then her face slowly paled, as her large eyes rested in wondering embarassuent on the stranger. He drew a deep breath, then said, hestiatingly;

"Are you, indeed, Mr. Scabrook's niece—his favorite niece, as he has told me?"

"He is foolish enough to call me so; yet—what must you think of me—you,

"He is foolish enough to call me so; yet—what must you think of me—you, his old friend, whom I thought I had never seen before?"

Her color again rose and her eyes fell before his gaze, but he smiled regulshly, saying:

"It might take hours to tell all I have thought about you. And so you were the romantle young lady who ran away from the convent school in Charleston after Gettysburg, bent on dening herole and impracticable won ders for your country. Horace wrote me something of it at the time, yet I never dreamed until now that my little recruit and she were one."

"I fear it has not added to your good opinion of me, and had I thought the stern young doctor before whom I trembled, and Uncle Horace's old friend George Iyzarde were also one and the same, I should never have dered to face you."

"Yet I have often wished to see you," said he earnestly. "It must have been that the wish was father to the thought in cnabiling me to recognize you to-day, having only seen you once before."

"Are you so sure of that?" she asked, archly.

He looked at her inquiringly, then replied:
"I was wounded, you know, or rather you didn't know. It was shortly be

He looked at her Inquiringly, then replied:

"I was wounded, you know, or rather you didn't know. It was shortly before the surrender. I was delirious. I think, but I fancied that I caught gilmpees of your face, fafrer than I had seen it before, yet still yours. It was doubless only fancy, though its fleeting, recurring vividness made it seem real.

"Then you never heard of Sister Maria Jones?"

Her face was grave, yet a merry light danced in her eyes.

"Well, no," he returned, unsuspectingly, "There were many nurses about us, yet— I believe you are quizzing me."

"What wonderful penetration! So, sir, you never heard of her? I fear you will next deny having coldly advised a timid soldler boy to go as a nurse, after telling him—"

The Ohio State Dairy and Food Commissioner, General S. B. Burst, has made public (Circular No. 6) the results of the Commission's lovestigation of baking powder. This Commission was formed by the Legislature, with instructions to make an examination of the food supply of the State, and to give a report of such examination to the public. The examination of the baking powders was made by Protessor H. A. Weber, State Chemist, and, relating as a does to an article of daily use in the food of aimost every one, is of particular interest. The rather startling fact is brought out by the report that, of the thirty different brands of baking powder analyzed, composing about all those sold in the State, twenty of them are made from alum, a substance declared by the highest medical authorities to be injurious to health when used in food.

stance declared by the bighest medical authorities to be fajurious to health when used in food.

The Commissioner classifies the baking powders into three general divisions, according to their value:

1st. Cream of Tartar Baking Powders;

2d. Phosphate Baking Powders;

2d. Alous Baking Powders.

The object of baking powders is, when mixed in the flour and auti-jected to moisture, to generate a leavening gas in the doogh, which will rules the bread and cause it to be porous and light. The Commissioner explains that the best baking powder is that which, the logredients being healthful, gives off the largest amount of resolution in the bread. A small amount of carbonate of ammonia, which is considered healthful, is used in zome of the cream of tartar powders to give them a higher strength. The Commission say that pure aimm is undoubtedly a hurtful saft, and that the resultant safts from its combination with soda, as formed in the bread, can scarcely be less hurtful. The report ranks the powders and shows the amount in each of inext resultants, which is combination with soda, as formed in the bread, can scarcely be less hurtful. The report ranks the powders and shows the amount in each of inext resultants, which is using it would appear as residuum in the bread, as follows:

A Napoteonic Manuscript.

A unique manuscript has been sold at the Hotel Buote, in F vis. for 5,000 frames. It is a manuscript of clabt written pages by the first Napoteon, giving a history of the Island of Carsies and written by him at Ajaccis in 1790. There is much in it which shows that the future emperor was them a cisciple of Hobespierre, of whom he speaks with the fervor of an enthistist. Ton him gauge is command the enthicities. To him gauge is command the interest and of content of the production of a brain which thought to repidly for the hand which set down the ideas. The resures are frequent and the charges many, but the manuscript is a sincer reflection of his mind in the year 1700. He dwells at length on the degradation of the products of the lasses all over Europe, and inefets that French armies possessing the grains of liberty shall ultimately over-throw and dominate the existing powers.
